

time. They invited me to come back with them and start the new ~~Princeton~~ Westminster Seminary. And so we formed this seminary there in Philadelphia to carry on the traditions of Princeton Seminary, and to continue the work that Princeton Seminary had done for over a century. Westminster Seminary was established for that purpose, and it looked as if here was the most hopeful thing for the future, the foundation of Westminster Seminary. But sometimes I wish I could/^{just}step, jump from that right to today. In fact, in giving this in the past, sometimes I practically done that, I haven't mentioned Westminster Seminary there. I've told the Princeton Seminary situation, what they did, and then I told what we're trying to do, and show how we come out of that background, and slip gently over the Westminster situation, because certainly our opposition with its present Modernism, unbelief, and so-called New Orthodoxy is entirely different than any attitude that we have toward the present Westminster Seminary, and my inclination would be to say nothing critical of Westminster Seminary at all, because the situation is so utterly different, and/^{yet}you ~~understand~~ can't understand the situation without knowing/^{that}there's this other step in-between, and it is the case that most of you will come in contact with that sometime, and you will hear that story given from a viewpoint which would perhaps not make it reasonable that Faith Seminary should have been established. And under those circumstances it ~~seem~~ surely is reasonable that a little idea, it would give two or three hours to give a full idea, that a little idea should be given to you what the situation was and why we ~~couldn't~~ ^{didn't} stay at that ~~spe~~ step, why we had to move forward and take another step, and found Faith Seminary down here. Another step; of course it always does harm does harm to have to take another step. It confused the forces, it divided those who were standing with us. People couldn't understand why such a step should be necessary; it has caused difficulty even at the present, and yet it was an absolutely necessary step. And so I must tell you briefly of ~~the~~ the developments. Westminster Seminary was founded, Dr. Wilson was the head of the faculty, ~~he~~ and Dr. Machen and Dr. Allis, the three of them were the committee that did most of the planning. They got these younger fellows who worked with them,
