

Lamsa

him the facts about Lamsa and the claims of the Aramaic origin of the NT, etc. To my surprise --- the reporter who knew nothing about such things, wrote it up excellently. And really gave a picture of the true facts about Lamsa. The evening Bulletin had this on the front page, half way down the page when the Evening Bulletin came out at about 2 p.m. (the first edition came then). Somebody saw it and immediately got one for me and I said, Oh isn't that interesting. It told about me and what I'd said. I went right out and got a copy of the Bulletin, and looked at that spot and it said, Judge gives advice for couples considering divorce--something like that. So I thought, Well, I guess they put it on the front page in the first printing and then in the next printing after a while they move it to the back page and put something else on the front. I looked the whole paper through and it wasn't there anywhere. And as my landlord said when I mentioned it to him, he said, There's nobody ---this fellow Lamsa would not have influence enough to get a thing killed that was an attack on him. He said, someone got in touch immediately with the editor and said, Don't give Westminster Seminary that much favorable publicity! But it simply simply was another indication of the attitude like you see in this Literary Digest.

Shall we call that enough for today? O.K.
