

importance on which I definitely disagreed with him. Such points were never mentioned between us during the time that I was a student.

At Princeton Dr. Wilson was professor of Semitic philology and Old Testament Criticism. Dr. Davis was professor of Old Testament Interpretation. Dr. ~~David~~ Davis seemed to incline toward the general attitude of the liberal faction in the seminary rather than the conservatives. I learned later that at one time there had been simply one department of Old Testament and Dr. Wilson and Dr. Davis had very definitely found it difficult to work together, and, as a result of ~~this~~ this, the board of directors had divided it into two departments, so that each of them had his own department and they did not have to work together, ~~Dr.~~ Dr. Wilson's being called "Semitic Philology and Old Testament Criticism." I forget the exact name of Dr. Davis' department; it was something like "Old Testament ~~Ex~~ Exegesis." I forget; I think there were probably two parts to it, like Dr. ~~W~~ Wilson's. This division was continued during my first year at Westminster, with me as assistant to Dr. Wilson. However, I see I have gotten ahead of the story.

Dr. Allis was the ~~felt~~ felt himself as assistant to be absolutely ~~sub~~ subordinate to Dr. ~~W~~ Wilson, and always did whatever Dr. ~~W~~ Wilson suggested; in fact, a suggestion to Dr. Allis was almost a command and even, I believe, Dr. Wilson did not really intend it that way. This made for a very pleasant relationship between them but I don't think it was good because the way Dr. Allis spoke eventually about

Dr. Wilson suggested that he was irritated inside of himself at various times but he never let it show. To all appearances they got along very excellently in every way. I am sure the same could be said about Dr. Allis and myself during the six years that I was his assistant at Westminster after Dr. Wilson's death.

During the latter part of my time at Princeton I was ~~all~~ all my courses in Old Testament were with Dr. ~~W~~ Wilson, except those where I listened to lectures by a man brought in from New Brunswick Seminary to replace Dr. Davis who had died, I should say, a substitute for Dr. Davis who had died. I had much contact ~~&~~ with ~~Dr. Wilson~~ during ~~these~~ these last two years and some which I might discuss in a separate paper some time. [ I am quite anxious to do so but shall not do so now.]
