

In modern English it is a place we gather to worship God. He is going to build up a place where David worshiped God . That is fallen down. The tabernacle of David. Yes, but is that what Tabernacle is meant in Old English? Well you if you want, go to Shakespere and Elizabethian dramatists and sometimes you get your evidence simply in looking into a concordance. Here we turn over to Hebrews. And we find in Hebrews that we read that by faith Abraham sojourned in a land of promise as in a strange country dwelling in ~~a~~ tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob. Isn't that grand how they worshipped all the week, they lived right in tabernacles. (Laughter $7\frac{1}{2}$ from audience) with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob (Laughter) Well it gives a hint of the Old English with the Old English tabernacle just means a tent. That is all it is. Only a tent. So you see if you want to understand the Bible correctly, the thing to do is take your concordance and study the meaning of all these words in the Old English and study Shakespeare and Elizabethian dramatists and put in many years of studying the English of 400 years ago and then you will know what these words and forms and so on mean. That is approximately. No one today knows exactly what Old English means. but there is a simpler way to do it. (Laughter from class) A much simpler way is to study the Hebrew and the Greek and see what the original meant. And of course if you look in the original of the Greek and find the word ~~seience~~ ($8\frac{1}{2}$) which just means a tenth and has nothing specifically ~~a~~ to do with worship at all and if you look in the Hebrew of Amoth from which this is quoted, you'll find the word $8\frac{3}{4}$ which is the regular Hebrew word for tent. And so this translation tabernacle, you might say proves all millennialism here Yes, if you consider that the modern sense of it is what the translators of the authorized version meant and if the translators of the authorized version were inspired. But if you go back to the Greek and the Hebrew there is no such idea in here at all. It is just of the return and build again the ~~temple~~ tent of David which is fallen down and build again the ruins thereof and set ~~up~~ it up that the residue of men might seek
