

But, when they became numerous, that their voice would be ~~heard~~ heard, when they became powerful enough in the nation that they were a group that others would have to pay some attention to what they said, then I say it was their duty, ~~not~~ not as their primary duty, but yet a duty to speak out against moral iniquity, ~~as~~ such as that of the Communists. To speak out against such aggression as that of the Communists. To speak out ~~against~~ against such brutality as that of the Communists. And to speak out against such a menace to human freedom and human thought, as the Communist movement represents.

Now, I am sorry that I ran over a little, but I did want to round out the subject. I hope that Mr. Maris will forgive me if this takes five minutes off of his hour.
