

point where all this valuable studying I've done, every bit of it is rooting back to problems in the New Testament and the Old Testament and the final answer to each of these matters is exactly what does the Bible say and I have lost that facility which I had in these languages to go to the Bible and say, 'This is exactly what it says'." I said to him, "Will you write me a little paper and state that. That will be of help in encouraging others." And I was disappointed in the paper because if he had written me a paper saying how valuable he found these, how important he found them, how much (12.5), stating how sorry he was for the great mistake he made in not keeping up these languages and so on,- it was a very penitent paper and I didn't so I never really made use of the paper. I didn't want to use a thing with his name on it

But the way he expressed himself busy with good things, he was doing important things. But this one which with a few minutes a day he could have done and done in a way that would have been so worthwhile and that would have just fit in on these vital things when he came to them then, this one thing he had neglected and it was gone and it seemed to him that it would be a very
