in what I've told them"? Who thinks this is true? I mean you have to put a different (motive or molding) to make an invitation.

Question from floor: No, no, no, I think it is "Who would have believed what we are going on to tell now." The thing we've heard which is what follows. "Who would have believed the thing we have heard which we go on to tell now."

Now at the rate we are going we'll need another three months for chapter 53 and we have about 6 or 8 more sessions and we must get to the middle of 56 unfortunately. And there's a great deal of, tremendously important _____ though none more important than 53. We really ought to have 4 sessions on 53 but I don't see how we can. We meet again tomorrow, we have our test a week from tomorrow and next week Monday I'm speaking in Pittsburgh. We can't discuss it together next Tuesday because of two reasons. First, because you'll be writing a test and second, because I'll be in Pittsburgh. We can't discuss it Monday. There's only one reason, because I'll be in Pittsburgh. Of course next week we are together two times and then I think there's only two after Christmas so that makes only five more so I think we'll just have to tell the office we're continuing this course till May for four credits instead of two credits. I don't see what else we can do.

I'm on the run today. I finished a Church History lecture and I had to run up to Southampton and give an hour and a quarter on evolution and then rush back to get here in time to discuss Isaiah. So that's changing
