criticism, that when people come and want to learn something about Christ he ~~would~~ will turn them over to an unbelieving church. And we think that is terrible; we think that is wicked. We don't see how we can cooperate with that sort of thing. But he has nothing in this ^{booklet} ~~book~~ to say about that; he doesn't even mention that. What he talks about is one thing: that Graham asks people to come to the front ~~at the~~ - at the end of the service. He says this is wrong because he says there is no Scriptural warrant for it. He says the ~~Scripture~~ Scripture does not say you should ask people to come to the front at the end of a ~~service~~ service. He has here quite a strong statement about this on page 11 where he makes the statement that somebody from one of Graham's supporters, from some of his statements, he says, "We must conclude that we cannot be exclusive in our methodology, nor can we sit in judgment upon those who use a different methodology in evangelism from our own." He says, "This man appears to argue that both the use and the non-use of the invitation are ~~is~~ are right, as God blesses both ministries. But if the ~~evangelist's~~ evangelist's ~~choice~~ choice ~~is~~ in employing the invitation is an optional one, it cannot have Scriptural evidence to warrant it, for in that case the evangelical preacher would be under an obligation and have no option. If there is Biblical authority for the practice the non-user is failing ~~is~~ in duty, even though God may bless his ministry in spite of its deficiency." In ~~other~~ other words he says, "If the Bible says, ask people to come to the front; then anybody who doesn't ask them to come ~~to~~ to the front is ~~wicked~~ wicked. ~~But, he says~~ But," he says, "if the Bible doesn't say, 'Ask them to come to the ~~front~~ front,' then," he says, "you have no right to ask people to come to the front." Well, you might as well say we have no right to have pews in our churches. The Bible nowhere says you should have pews. The Bible nowhere says you should have hymn books. The Bible nowhere says you should have an invocation or a benediction. God gives us truths in His Word, and then He calls upon us, as Paul did, to try to find the
