

to protect themselves to be safe, but he had Jesuits for the teachers, for the tutors of his own children, and he had their teachings in his centers of the Government but he allowed Protestants to have positions of leading importance in the Government. The result was that Henry said, Paris is worth the mass. He said, I will change I will change my beliefs in order to give peace and safety to my Protestant brothers. This Edict of Nantes is irrevocable. It gives them safety and toleration ^{for} for all time to come, but the Jesuits trained his children. Then his lazy - lazy son Louis XIII took over and allowed Cardinal Richleau to control, and he didn't bother the Protestants except he said to them, Why do you need garrisons? You're perfectly safe. The Edict gives you absolute freedom, but to have a government within a government, you should do away with your garrisons. And most of them voluntarily gave them up. One or two did not and he attacked them and took ~~them~~ took away their garrisons but did not interfere with their freedom. Then Louis XIII was succeeded by his son, Louis XIV who ~~was~~ went into such debauchery, and such sin and wickedness that it was utterly indescribable, although he was a man of very considerable ability and very effective in many ways, and the Jesuits preachers in his courts thundered on Hell Fire and Terrors which are ahead, Miseries which are ahead for those who sin, and Louis XIV began to feel as if he could hear the fires cracking about him as he thought of what must be ahead for him, and he said to the Jesuit: What shall I do? And they said, Oh sire, there is no need of your worrying. You can easily build up merit enough to off set the wickedness of your life. Well he said, How could I do that? Well, they said, In your kingdom there are hundreds of thousands of people that don't pay any attention to what the Pope says, that don't go to mass, that read the Bible in the -- their translations which were not made by people that the Pope had authorized for the purpose. You just do away with that throughout France and you will have blessing forever, and you won't need to ^{worry} ~~worry~~ about your life. So Louis XIV gave orders that Protestants should no longer hold important positions in government. Then he gave orders cutting down their privileges one after another. He made it clear that anyone who wished to be saved, had better join the Roman church. ~~Many~~ Many people followed his desires. Then he began using force ~~g~~ against them, making it disagreeable for them, and then he
