

Now some people think we must stop with these two or three verses. Just what do these mean? I don't fully understand these let's study them. I heard of Dr. Warfield once that he said, Here is a verse that there have been 241 different suggested interpretations; now I'll give you the correct one which had never been given before. That was the 242nd one! There have been passages that at first reading you won't get at all, and with a lot of study you may get them now. But it is still more likely that as you study Scripture and come to other sections, you will see something that fits with it and explains it to you and makes it clear. The Bible is its own best interpreter; one sections explains another sections. It all fits together. I personally feel there is great value in taking sections and spending a long time over them, but I think the greatest value of all - that which we must never neglect is to go over it as a whole seeing what we get, and seeing what questions there are, seeing what things we don't understand and then go over it again and see how much becomes clear. And every time we go through we find in it things that explain other things we previously had not known and would not have known where to look for if we had not seen it. So all the Scripture is important. The most vital things is not that we take one particular verse and just squeeze it just as tight as we can to get every bit of ~~XXXX~~ truth out of it, though there is much more truth in almost every verse than we get when we first look at it, but to compare Scripture with Scripture and get a knowledge of it as a whole. That to me is one of the most important things I would like to drive home in these three mornings I'll be with you. That is the importance of com-
