

God has us here not to make a perfect world. He will do that in His own time. Jesus is coming back. Oh, that it may be soon. I was talking to Francis Schaeffer couple nights ago, and he said, Oh if only the Lord would come back right now! Wouldn't it be wonderful. How grand if He would come real soon. As I talked with Francis I saw how his heart goes out to other people because he said to me, the doctors gave me a thorough examination. The growth in my abdomen the size of a football has disappeared entirely. My bone marrow, they found no trace of cancer in it. It's wonderful what God has done for me. But, Oh, how careful I must be. How am I going to state this so that people, while rejoicing with me in what God has done for me will not to be led if they are in a similar situation and if the Lord does not choose to do this for them to feel they do not have enough faith and that the fault is in them. God's will for some ~~xx~~ of us may be further life; for some of us it may be His will to take us. We don't know. Francis said, I don't know what's ahead of us. At present it looks wonderful. Here he was rejoicing in God's blessing to him, but his heart was going out for fear of injuring people in a similar situation. May God give us a heart that does everything to make things more peaceful, more just, to make people safer in the world, but to put our primary emphasis on helping individuals to know Christ. On witnessing to the glorious Gospel of Christ. On being used to help those who know Him to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Saviour.

Let's remember people in difficulties and problems. Let us remember Carter, Begin, Sadat in case the problems they grapple with don't work out and they find themselves facing miserable situations which are coming. Sooner or later we don't know, but they certainly are coming. From all that anybody can see. Let us pray that God will enable those who truly know Jesus Christ to come and make their lives
