

A new mimeographed edition was prepared ~~and~~ consisting simply of the translation as quoted by the Intermediate Committee. This was mimeographed and submitted to another committee which was called a Senior Editorial Committee. It was hoped that the Intermediate Committee would be ~~in~~ able to cover about eight verses per hour ~~and~~ and that the Senior Committee ~~would~~ would be able to cover about twelve verses per hour, but the number of verses covered varied greatly depending on various sections and what suggestions were made. The Senior Editorial Committee would go over the Intermediate Editorial Committee's work and would make such ^{adopted} changes as might seem wise to it. Many of the changes/by the Senior Editorial Committee were adopted by a vote of a majority of only one, as in the case of the Intermediate Editorial Committee. s.

The plan had been that the text as presented by the Senior Editorial Committee would be a final text, and that the Committee on Bible Translation would simply which was composed of nine people, was simply to make (no) general decisions about principles involved in making the translation as a whole, or deal with especially difficult problems. However, the Committee on Bible Translation met almost ~~continuously~~ continuously for several years before it completed the work, and went through the whole Bible two or three times in so doing. So it is my impression that they actually reviewed everything that the Senior Editorial Committees had done. I do not know anything about the inner workings of this committee, but would be very much surprised if many of its decisions ~~were~~ were not, as in the case of the lower committees, made by a vote of a majority of only one.

Thus it is altogether possible that a Team Committee might have translated a work or phrase in a certain way, that an Intermediate ~~team~~ would change it, that a Senior Committee would make ~~it~~ a change which would amount to going back to the way the Team translation had done it, and that the Committee on Bible Translation would make a change which would go back to what the Intermediate Committee had done. In my opinion the work as could be a much better work if changes had not been
