judgment into into it? Just what do you mean by judgment? It is rather questionable whether in this particular verse we have anything that definitely declares an act of God. That is, it might be a divine prediction of what is going to happen and of course everything that happens God controls, but to say in any specific sense it is an act of God rather than an act of man, I rather question whether we have any such idea in v. 5 here. Mr. Parkinson I think you had an idea, didn't you? (Student) Would the harvest man? Who would the harvest man be, what is the corn, why does he say corn instead of wheat or barley, exactly what does that prove, and then he reaps the ears with his arm, why his arm instead with a threshing machine, and he gathers ears in the valley of Rephaim, why is it he gathers ears; just what do all these things indicate in the parable? I mean, is it a parable like that? Or is it simply a simile? It can be one, it can be the other, but what is our ? (Student) V. 6 would suggest that something drastic happened? But now supposing that a man were to come in the back door here and he were to say, "Look this way, everyyody," and we'd look and he would hold two revolvers toward us, and he would say, "Now, hold up your hands, everybody," and we'd put our hands up and then he would turn to his friend and say, "Go among them and get all the money that you can out of their pockets," and suppose his friend came through and took all the money out of all the pockets of all of us, and then when he got through with that supposing that I were to turn out a vest pocket here that he hadn't look@d at and show you two pennies in it and suppose Mr. Lin were to turn out his vest pocket and show you a $5.00 gold piece in it. Well, then we would say, "Well now he got a $100.00 bill out of Mr.---'s pocket and he got a big check out of Mr. ---'s and he got all of this money from the rest of us, but here is something he overlooked--the stuff that was in my inner vest pocket and Mr. Lin's inner vest pocket. Well, now in a case like that something drastic would certainly have happened, wouldn't it, and if that had happened
