1. <sup>make treaties</sup> The first step would be to ~~treat~~ with the Soviet Union which, for the sake of permitting/~~United States~~ <sup>American</sup> consular officials and others to live in that territory, although insulated from much contact with Russian citizens and under constant observation surveillance of the Russian secret police. In return for this, to allow an increase in the number of Russian spies permitted to live in this country and to devote themselves to ~~exchange of~~ learning American defense secrets, finding <sup>ascertaining</sup> where the weak points in our protection are, seeking out American ~~brain~~ traitors who can be ~~gathered~~ gathered into cells in which they can secretly plot the overthrow of our government. ~~Yikes~~ The making of such treaties constitutes a big step.

2. A second step that might be of even greater importance than this is to make treaties with the Russians in which it is agreed that neither side will carry on preparation of nuclear materials or will do anything to use space for war and treaties which in other ways will tie the hands of the ~~Am~~ American military forces, while leaving the Russians free to sign papers which to them are merely a "scrap of paper", and to continue exactly as they feel inclined.

Many of our people have forgotten the fact that some time ~~ago~~ ago when the Russians unilaterally discontinued testing nuclear weapons the American government immediately followed suit, acting upon the assumption that this was to be a permanent arrangement. Eventually the Russians suddenly began their long series of tests which must have taken the preparation for which must have been in progress for many months before the series began. We do not know how great a step forward in nuclear knowledge these tests may have given (better word?) them. We followed this up with a few tests of our own, but then fatuously/h/ proceeded to make a treaty with Russia whereby neither side would make tests. We know the
