

point is a note I happened to see in a Methodist Sunday School magazine a number of years ago. It read something like this: "Russia made a suggestion in the United Nations that all the nations should disarm. Nothing was done about it. Russia has again made the suggestion that all the nations disarm. Nothing has been done about it. Surely it is time that the western nations did something about carrying out this excellent Russian suggestion."

How could anyone write such a note, if he were familiar with the conquests of the Russians, with the well-known fact that the Russian army was even then still mobilized to a far greater degree than that of any other country in the world, and that a bristling Iron Curtain had been established around the Russian conquests to hold the people in as though the property of the Central Committee? He must have been very naive!

Congressional investigators have examined the names which appear on the letterheads of communist front organizations. It is amazing how frequently the names of prominent leaders of the National Council of Churches have appeared in these lists. They may try to explain it away as they choose, but the evidence is overwhelming. Whether willfully or ignorantly, many of them have been only too glad to give their names to be used by agencies acting as fronts for Moscow.

Some years ago, a book was published by Harper Brothers, entitled The Christian Hope and the Task of the Church, consisting of surveys prepared by commissions of the World Council. As one looks through this book, he finds many statements which ridicule the idea that individual salvation is important, and say that this is a selfish attitude. Especially in the last section there are many vague phrases about Christ, but nothing positive about Jesus having died as a vicarious sacrifice that men might be saved through
