

ment of the purpose for which the order is founded and in my opinion the Romanist Church as a denomination today would be non-existent or else extremely small if it were not for what had been done by the Jesuit Order. Yes? (Student question) I don't think we have much evidence of the Masons in early (5. There have been countries in which there have been masonic organizations that have been quite active but as an organization its influence is not a fraction of that of the Jesuits. (Another student question) So far as I know it does not. So far as I know there is nothing comparable. ~~xxxxxx~~ The Greek Orthodox Church as an organization is far weaker than the Roman Catholic Church though it has remarkable tenacity. Yes? (Question) Both of them are teachers. They have, not by any means all, but I wouldn't be surprised if half of them are ~~xxx~~ teachers. You see every one of them ~~x~~ has twelve to fifteen years of college work before he can be given full membership in the order. They are very, very highly trained men - highly educated - and they are trained in various countries. They are trained for whatever they are supposed to do but trained so they can adapt themselves to various sorts of things. They have many orphanages too. They run many orphanages, they have many schools and they are supposed to be ready to do whatever they're assigned to. It was his purpose it should not be a large order but an order that would be able to go into strategic situations and take them or if there's a country in which things look pretty hopeless for the Roman Catholics, they will put great numbers of Jesuits into it in order to grapple with its problems. (Question) I would say that of Roman Catholic Schools, probably if you took say the best third of them, of the Roman Catholic seminaries or colleges, schools of higher education, if you took the best third, probably nine-tenths of those would be Jesuit schools. Now whether the one-tenth that ~~xxxxxx~~ were not, might happen to be the very best or further down the line, that would vary from place to place. But
